

skin as it should be

PROFESSIONAL
MICROBIOME SKINCARE
For sustainably healthy skin

A close-up, high-resolution photograph of a person's face, focusing on the eyes, nose, and mouth. The skin is fair and has a natural, healthy glow. The person's eyes are brown and looking slightly to the right. The nose is straight and well-defined. The mouth is slightly open, showing a hint of teeth. The background is dark and out of focus.

Skin should be alive

Your skin is an ecosystem

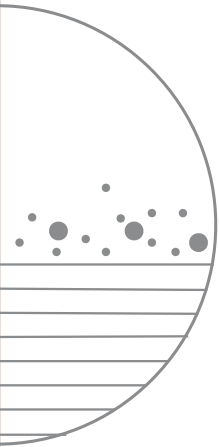

Your skin microbiome is an ecology of billions of diverse microbes that protect it from pathogens.

Similar to your gut, these microbes play essential roles in protecting your skin and communicating with your immune system.

Skin should be resilient

Why a balanced microbiome is so important

Healthy skin has less inflammation and ages at a slower rate.

DNA sequencing technology has shown that healthy skin requires a robust microbiome, composed of millions of bacteria, fungi, and viruses.

These microorganisms are essential for protecting the skin from pollution and invading pathogens, educating our immune systems, and increasing the production of moisturising factors like Hyaluronic Acid.

Common causes of a compromised skin microbiome

Sebum stripping

Most skincare products strip skin of its natural oils and surface microbes and try to replace them with man-made alternatives.

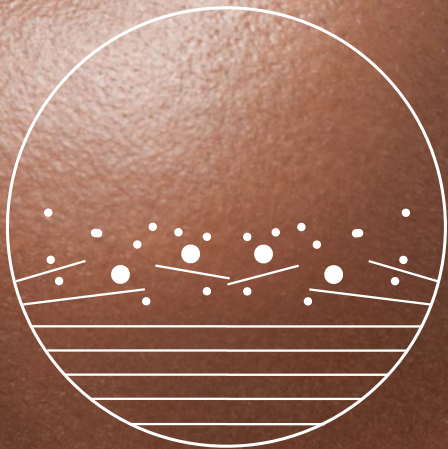

Modern lifestyle

Our sterile, indoor lifestyles separate us from the microbes present in the soil, plants, and rivers that should build our microbial diversity.

Pollution

Your skin's microbes form a delicate ecosystem that protects your skin. Synthetic pollutants from products and the environment can disrupt the balance.

Skin shouldn't be compromised

A close-up photograph of two women smiling warmly at the camera. The woman on the left has a darker complexion and is laughing with her mouth wide open, showing her teeth. The woman on the right has a lighter complexion and is smiling with her mouth slightly open, also showing her teeth. Both women have their hands near their faces, with their fingers gently touching their cheeks. The background is a soft, out-of-focus light color.

Skin should be diverse
